THE ARCTIC NIGHT AT NORWAY.

No experience of the long days in the north of Scotland, or even at Throndbjem (631 deg.) gives any adequate forecast of the true arotic night. Near the arctic circle you may, for about a fortnight at midsummer, see the sun descend below the horizon at ten minutes to twelve, leaving a subdued light, as if he were behind a cloud, and rise again at ten minutes past, nearly at the same spot, which, of course, is north, with enhanced splendor. For the few minutes of the sun's absence a night chill is perceptible, which is dispelled directly by his rising rays; but so far we have not yet reached the arctic summer. The next night, if you have been voyaging on meauwhile you must be a degree or so within the circle, and if the weather is fine and the northern horison free from high land, you may carefully watch the golden orb (not generally so red as with us) descend toward the horizon, but when about three times his own diameter from the horizon, after a few minutes of apparent standstill, begin to rise again, moving toward the east. The heat and brilliancy of the sun this night are such that parasols are generally used, till the interest of a few minutes of crisis causes them to be discarded, and that if there be not to much wind, holes may be made in wollen cloths, pipes lighted, etc., by ordinary burning glasses; the sun may be gazed on, though with some pain, by the naked eye. The further north you go the higher is the sun's lowest point, till at Tromso (69 deg. 40 min.) he is five or six times his diameter above the horizon, and the longer is the period during which he never sets, which is a full month at Hammerfest (70 deg. 40 min). The amount of light of course diminishes during the evening, but after half past ten remains the same, and appears toward midnight rather to increase. It has greater softness than the light of day, and sheds a peculiar warm glow over the sea and rocks, which must be seen to be thoroughly understood. After midnight it is interesting to watch the evening light change its character; about half past twelve or rather later it issumes a whiter color, more like what we know as early morning light an hour after sunrise. The birds fly about, the fishes jump and animated nature seems to know as little of night as inammate. On shore, for instance, at Tromso, people are out walking or standing at their house doors, enjoying the night as we do the Is given with safety and the happiest results to day. Perhaps they retire to sleep at one or them, and they are up again early. It deserves to be recorded also that a photographer at Tromso took successful portraits of a large group of steamboat passengers exactly at midnight of June 27. It need hardly be mentioned that neither within the arctic circle nor considerably south of it were any stars visible at midsummer, nor till the end of July; and the moon but rarely, and then as pale as at noon in England. Of course this description is true only of bright cloudless nights; there are dull nights there, as there are dull days with us; and many a traveller may steam from Throudhjem to the North Cape without ever seeing the sun at midnight, or being able to read the smallest print all night through his porthole, as the present writer could do shortly two; but sleep seems scarcely a necessity to after leaving Throudhjem. The temperature is very different from what is often supposed. It varies to an extraordinary degree with the clearness of the day and with the direction of the wind. A north or northeast wind brings severe cold; yet if it be not very strong the sun shining free from the clouds counteracts it so far as to make every sunny seat very hot. Especially at night and in the early morning is this heat remarkable. because then we expect cold and dew. A south or west wind is of course mild, and would cause great heat, but that it generally brings clouds and rain, as on the similarly circumstanced west coast of Scotland. On the land the heat is felt in the arctic region far more than on the sea. The soil undergoes no cooling process in the night, and is therefore unfreshed by any dew. The hills afford frequent shelter from the wind, and enclose many a spot on which the sun pours his full heat; while on board ship the wind is always present. On this account many of the valleys in the far north have an intolerable and worse than tropi-

HOW A LIGHTHOUSE WAS BUILT. The mountain system of Brittany has a sort of continuation in a series of reefs and igneous rocks which jut out in a broken line westward of Finisterre. On one of these rocks, called L'Isle de Sain, there stands a lighthouse, but the real danger lies to the westward, and the rocks there have literally bristled with wrecks of vessels making for Brest. In 1869 the committee for lighting the coast of France decided to erect a lighthouse on the extreme end of the danger, and after a careful examination M. Ploix, the consulting engineer, decided on the Armen Rock as the best site. At the same time he did not attempt to depreciate the prodigious difficulty of the task, and characterized it as "nearly impracticable." The currents are so strong and the sea runs so high that neither M. Ploix nor the other engineers, nor the director of lighthouses, was able to approach nearer than fifty feet. All they were able to ascertain was that the rock was gneiss, about eight yards across and twelve in length, and that it was just visible at low water. After settling their plan of operations, they applied to the fishermen of the neighboring island of Sein, as most familiar with the locality and the danger, to commence the necessary works. These men undertook the task, and, provided with life belts, began to watch regularly for the best opportunity of landing on the rock. As soon as they got their chance they crouched down on the rock, and clinging on with one hand, with the other worked away with a cold chisel so as to sink a sufficient number of sockets for the insertion of the iron clamps. Every now and then a wave would break over the rock, drenching weather was more favorable and forty new holes were pierced, some of which were below water. In 1869 the blocks of stone were first placed in iron clamps about a yard long, rivited into the sockets. The blocks were all hewn according to pattern, and joined together with Parker-Medina cement. The work of dropping them into position was exceedingly laborious, owing to the violence of the sea; but two of the officials were constantly in attendance, urging on the workmen, and at the end of the season twenty-five blocks, each about a yard cube, had been successfully laid. In 1870 eight landings took place and eleven cubes were laid, and in 1871 as many as twenty-three, the work by this time becoming easier as further progress was made. A steam launch is now used for the conveyance of material, and a sort of masonry scaffolding having been built, the builders have succeeded during the first half of this year's season in placing in position no less than eightyseven blocks. The expense, however, as may be imagined, has hitherto proved considerable. Each of the forty five holes pierced during the first two years cost upward of 2,000 francs, and on December 31 last the charges had amounted to more than 189,000 francs. The light is to be a revolving one of the first order, and ninety-seven feet above high-water mark; there are to be seven stories in the house, and there will also be a steam whistle for use in foggy
